The healing sight and sound of water

Thank you for uplifting posts, unifying us in our common love for our home river.

Sometimes you need to DO for those you love, and sometimes you just need to rest in that love.

As the world turned upside down this spring, we launched #LoveLiz to invite you to rest in our common love for our home river. Science said it might be good for you.

“The mere sight and sound of water can induce a flood of neurochemicals that promote wellness, increase blood flow to the brain and heart and induce relaxation,” reports Wallace Nichols, author of Blue Mind.

WOW how you’ve responded. Throughout this issue, we’re sharing some of the wellness-inducing river moments you’ve posted at #LoveLiz on Facebook, Instagram and ElizabethRiver.org/LoveLiz - and cheering you on to post more.

Michael Dolsey of Norfolk shared this journey on Instagram for our #LoveLiz initiative. See constantly updated posts and share yours at elizabethriver.org/loveliz.

Fishing counts

“Under the new VA executive order, fishing counts as obtaining food. So go fellow Virginians, obtain that food! The fish are very shallow, mirrolures did the trick, God bless.” #LoveLiz

Glen Pizzanello (not pictured) and Warren Reese (left) of Chesapeake posted this on #LoveLiz. They give frequent fishing tips on their social media site, Run the Marsh.

“We have been fishing the Elizabeth River for nearly 20 years. Over time, we have seen the river gain so much clarity. The speckled trout have returned in very healthy numbers,” Glen told us. Share your river love.

Listen to Skye Zentz perform her original RIVER SONG at ElizabethRiver.org/LoveLiz. She grew up on Knitting Mill Creek. She says she’s “giving the river a voice.” See how we’ve set her song to your #LoveLiz river posts.
From the Executive Director

Crisis or no, you made me happy on this morning journey.

In the chill of a spring Sunday morning, I go paddle boarding with my white lab, Sallee, crouched still on the bow, her nose following the birds lifting up in constant punctuation to our journey.

We pass the wetlands and oyster reefs Elizabeth River Project helped restore along the Virginia Zoo shore. A kingfisher flits before us, tree to tree. Red-winged blackbirds chortle, swaying, atop marsh grasses. Along a shoreline restoration we completed with a homeowner, the green heron, a chunky bird with a rusty breast, sits motionless on a branch.

The wind picks up, ruffling the river. The board makes a satisfying slap, lifting and falling as we cut across the waves. A man and two small girls are sharing binoculars on a pier. “We came out to see the birds. We didn’t expect to see a dog,” he calls.

As I turn home, the chatter of birds in the wetlands is almost as loud as the organ music I also hear from an outdoor speaker on the opposite shore, and I am unexpectedly happy amid the crisis. I feel an abiding gratitude for you; donors, partners, staff and board, for decades of ecosystem restoration that helped bring this morning to its rich swell of life.

Almost home, I see my neighbor on her deck. I ask her to take a picture of me for the Elizabeth River Project’s #LoveLiz campaign and One Flock sub-theme. You hold your arms wide, social distancing, but in solidarity with our One Flock sculptures at Paradise Creek Nature Park, where humans seem to take flight with metal blue herons. Benediction: Moments after I resume paddling, a real blue heron glides overhead.

Mission – To restore the Elizabeth River to the highest practical level of environmental quality through community, business and government partnerships.

Mudflats is the newsletter of the Elizabeth River Project, a membership-based non-profit working to restore the Elizabeth River through citizen, government and business partnerships. “Mudflats” refers to that slippery, biologically active zone where land and water meet, symbolizing our search for common ground among diverse interests.

Living River Trust preserves 500 acres of pristine land

While the rest of the environmental movement chafed at home this Earth Day, our sister non-profit, the Living River Trust, celebrated something huge: The transfer of 500 acres of forest to the Great Dismal Swamp Wildlife Refuge, to be protected forever.

The Elizabeth River Project salutes the Trust for protecting this enormous swath of forest on the southern edge of the Elizabeth River ecosystem. The land not only will aid wildlife and recreation but protect water quality. “We’re thrilled,” said John Harbin, Trust administrator – and he should be. The Trust is fast gaining traction as the only locally based land trust in South Hampton Roads.

The Living River Trust is on the lookout for both landowners and community representatives interested in discussing how to protect high-value open space in perpetuity. And transferring ownership of the land is not the only option. A “conservation easement” is another option that allows the landowner to retain ownership and gain tax benefits.

Donor Spotlight - Fun on the fly

K endall Osborne, valued donor and avid fly fisherman, posted this “fun catch,” as he describes it, for our #LoveLiz campaign. He’s lived in Norfolk on the Lafayette branch of the Elizabeth since the 1990s. He says it’s wonderful to see the return of fish, mussels and abundant breeding oysters. “Count the otters, minks, rabbits, raccoons, and other land animals to the birds, and there’s an incredible and largely healthy wild environment right here in the city.”

“No quarantines were violated in the taking of this photo. This outing was required for health (mental) reasons.” #LoveLiz

Deep Eddy
Better than a clock, this river sweeping past my window, first gathering the inward tide then emptying as it ebbs.

And under a late summer sun sometimes a fish leaps free from the surface, an egret glides low doublings its figure into bows:

one tipped up to cup the sky, one tipped down to scoop the depths and me at my desk, a witness to wonder, how it pierces time like a heron’s beak.

Governor Ralph Northam offered congratulations from the top as our participating business and government facilities documented this year’s total: Nearly six million pounds of pollution they voluntarily reduced before it could reach the Elizabeth River.

“Together, we have made tremendous progress… It takes a village to be stewards of the environment,” said Northam, addressing the Elizabeth River Project’s annual River Star Businesses Recognition Luncheon Jan. 23 at the Portsmouth Renaissance. Naval Station Norfolk won River Star Hall of Fame, the top award, sponsored by Inside Business, for constructing a super-efficient, “combined heat and power plant,” completed in 2018, not only is decreasing greenhouse gas emissions – but is also saving the Navy $6.5 million a year in utility costs.

Recognized at four-star Model level in the program were Bay Environmental, Farmer John’s Market, Lyon Shipyard and Nauticus. Since the River Star Business program’s inception in 1997, 134 participating facilities have reduced pollution to the Elizabeth by 356 million pounds and created or conserved more than 1,882 acres of wildlife habitat.

Thank you for making this program possible with your generous support. Find out how your business can “star” in river stewardship: pboatwright@elizabethriver.org, RiverStarBusinesses.org.

Virtual River School: Her Highness is in session!

She’d always meant to do it, but perhaps it makes sense that it took “this great pause,” as she puts it, for Princess Elizabeth to get around to creating an on-line version of her education treasure box. After all, she hails from the 1600s. That’s when the Elizabeth River was named for her and parchment was more in style.

She’s doing rather well adjusting to this century. Since the spring, she’s been posting “A Royal Minute” a week as a YouTube video for Elizabeth River Project’s new Virtual River School at elizabethriver.org/kids, where you’ll also find a growing list of original river activities for kids, from water quality testing to how to make a pelican puppet, as well as many favorites from education partners.

“We have been wanting to create this new education platform and this (Covid-19 stay-home orders) has allowed us to do that,” reports her highness, aka Robin Dunbar, Deputy Director – Education, Elizabeth River Project.

Help us return to live education as soon as possible with our Learning Barge and Paradise Creek Nature Park. Your special gift would really help.

NEW! Kids’ River Reading Club

Kids! No need to stay stuck at home this summer.

Take an imaginary journey with the Mole, who discovered in Wind in the Willows, “there is nothing – absolutely nothing – half so much worth doing as simply messing about in boats,” or some of our other favorite nature books for children, such as Island of the Blue Dolphin.

Read 10 from our new list for the River Reading Club at elizabethriver.org/kids. Our Princess Elizabeth will send you a royal bookmark – and you might win a free book!

This could help: Audible Amazon is offering free streaming right now of an enormous book collection.
